Preface.

IT is said of one of the judges that when the Copyright Act was being framed he strongly recommended the exclusion from its privileges of any book not provided with an Index.

He afterwards wrote books of his own, conspicuous by the absence of any adequate key to their contents, and explained that the Index was purely a matter of arrangement with the publishers; the fact being that publishing is business and not philanthropy, and that a publisher will not usually increase his risk of immediate loss if the public cannot discriminate between books with Indexes and books without.

Genealogists who find a publisher willing to face this risk should see that he does not regret his boldness.

The use of an Index of Places in such a work as THE INTERNATIONAL GENEALOGICAL DIRECTORY does not need much dwelling upon. An innovation in this instance lies in the inclusion, in brackets, of the Surnames associated with each place. This serves a number of purposes. In the first place, where misprints may possibly occur, though I hope there are none, the insertion of the Surname will enable the reference to be traced immediately, if the Index of Surnames be consulted. In the second place, he whose interests are centred in one locality can see at a glance what families are attracting attention in his district, and whether those into which his own folk intermarried are included amongst them. In the third, while actively record-searching or planning co-operative action upon any records, or the publication of local records and family history, the ready discovery of "who is interested in what," as regards any county or place, may easily be of the first importance.

One wishes contributors were more gifted with the bump of locality. Of places called "Thorpe," for example (1168), there are dozens in England, while even an uncommon-looking place-name like "Newbiggin" (1099) is represented by no less than nine parishes, hamlets, townships, and chapelries in the North Country. Cases like this, after a good deal of scrutiny, examination of atlases, maps, and gazetteers, and weighing of evidence for acceptance or rejection as appertaining to a particular county, have to be deposited reluctantly in the "No County" section. There they are, practically lost, and the likelihood of replies to the query correspondingly diminished. It is easy enough to say, "Oh, everyone knows STEWART of Physgill, or REID of Pitfoddels; your Indexer should look 'em up." Places and country familiar enough to the querist, no doubt, but if the Indexer had to "look 'em up" in too many cases, the cost of the Index would be prohibitive. The time has gone by when the study embraced a few thousand "county" families; we now with wider view encompass all humanity, and our descendants will have to identify the situation of the desirable villa residence whose happy tenant (on a three years' agreement) dubs it "Arundel," because his patronymic is HOWARD, or "Chatsworth," because he happens to be a SPENCER.
